Two-year follow-up of anteroposterior rotational acetabular osteotomy: a case report and review of the literature. We present the 2-year follow-up of a patient who underwent anteroposterior rotational acetabular osteotomy (APRAAO) at the age of 7 years for developmental dysplasia of the hip (DDH). Magnetic resonance imaging demonstrated that the radiographic findings were persistent. Computed tomography scan demonstrated femoral head-neck discontinuity. The hip joint effusion persisted but resolved without further intervention. We discuss peri-operative and post-operative complications encountered in this patient. Involvement of sodium tanshinone II A in the signaling cascades that are dependent on the MAPKs and Akt/p70S6K during MAPK-induced apoptosis. Nortriptyline (NTPL), a bioactive component of Chinese herb, was found to have potential apoptotic effect and inhibit the survival pathways in breast cancer cells. However, the detailed mechanisms remain unknown. In this study, the role of NTPL-induced apoptotic signaling pathway is explored. Here, we showed that the activation of MAPKs (ERK1/2 and JNK1/2) and Akt/p70S6K are key molecular events involved in NTPL-induced apoptosis. The NTPL triggered MAPK-dependent apoptotic death through a caspase-dependent pathway, which was verified by inactivation and inhibition of MAPK with U0126 and SP600125, respectively. As the results of Western blotting, NTPL activated the MAPK-dependent upstream kinase, MKK4 and MKK7. The apoptosis was also mediated through the sequential activation of caspase-9, caspase-8 and caspase-3. The analysis of protein expression profile showed that NTPL also activated Akt/p70S6K. However, the inhibition of p70S6K with PI-103 in the NTPL-treated breast cancer cells indicated that Akt/p70S6K is not essential for NTPL-induced apoptosis. Moreover, the inhibition of p70S6K by silencing its gene expression by RNA
